The extent of the defalcation—though not positive ly known—will, it is beheved reach the enermous amount of £200,000 The method by which the process of swindling was kept up is described as follows. When Mr. Redpath is sued a £100 stock, he added an '0' to the amount, thus making £1,000 on the books of the Company. This operation was also extended to stock of £200, £300 and £300, so that of every £100 transferred, he gained £300. Strange as it may seem, this wholesale swindling has gone on for years, and though Directors wondered when they were called upon to pay dividends upon £15,000 or £20,000 nore than they were liable for, yot the guilty party was not detected. Redpath has been arrested, and his examination will doubtless bring many strange secrets to
